reported in Yankton during 2010. An additional 27 cases were reported in Yankton County outside the city limits.

"It breaks down to one domestic call every 2 1/2 days in Yankton County," O'Farrell said. "I don't think people realize it is that big of a problem. Breaking it down like that, it even surprises me a little."

O'Farrell and Warren both thanked the local businesses that have provided contributions to the team and helped it get off the ground. Among them are Roger's Pharmacy, Applied Engineering, S&K Drywall, Truck Trailer, Clark's Rentals, Becker's Body Shop, KPH, McDonald's, Hy-Vee, CorTrust Bank, Boller Printing and Yankton Motorsports.

Domestic violence is an issue that will most likely affect everyone's life at some time or another, O'Farrell said.

"I think at some point everybody knows or is going to know a victim of domestic violence, whether they just suspect it or know it," she said. "This is a chance to come together and support those people."

The Power Show offers much more than machinery. The event advertises itself as "something for everyone" and geared for the entire family. Besides tractors and engines, the grounds feature a farm emporium, ladies' building, memorabilia, Russian oven, crafts and flea market, historic buildings and blacksmith shop.

Activities and attractions include parades, a jail, steam threshing, corn shelling, tractor pull and mini-rod pull, along with bale throwing and nail driving.

For the youngsters, the Power Show offers a petting zoo, children's pedal pull and toy show.

The event has come a long way since its early days, much of it possible because of the relocation to Pioneer Acres in 1996, Nusz said.

"We have expanded the grounds, so there is a little bit more room," he said. "We are always looking for something new."

While the event has changed in some ways, its organizers have remained true to the original intent.

According to its website, the Menno Pioneer Heritage Association (MPHA) was incorporated April 24, 1995, at Menno. It is governed by a seven-member board of directors. The corporation was formed to create a living museum dedicated to the preservation of the cultural and eth-riod of time and then never see that person again once it is time to study another discipline.

According to Dr. Lori Hansen, dean of the Yankton campus, the LIC model encourages patient-centered health-care where physicians create meaningful relationships with the people they treat.

"The goals of this program are really developing continuous relationships with patients, so you see the patient not just for an acute illness on a specialty like surgery, pediatrics or OB-GYN," she said. "The students collect a panel of patients that they follow throughout the entire year. The best example of that continuity is when the students see an expectant mother. They follow that patient to the hospital when she delivers that baby and then they are able to see the newborn and follow that newborn the rest of the year."

That focus on relationships is what brought Dr. Alex Harding, sub dean of the Peninsula Medical School at the universities of Exeter and Plymouth in England, to Yankton to learn more about LICs.

"I'm running one of the first LICs in England, and that's very much based nic heritage found in southeastern South Dakota.

The MPHA has surpassed 325 members. A lifetime membership is available to any person or organization contributing $100 or more to the MPHA. Each member is entitled to one vote.

Members also receive a copy of the "Hayloft News," published periodically to keep the members up to date on events happening with the association.

On July 14, 1995, the MPHA purchased around 30 acres from Calvin and Carol Mettler. This land is located adjacent to the north edge of Menno. In 1998, the name "Pioneer Acres" was chosen as the official name for the site.

The Power Show is held every September on the third weekend after Labor Day. This event usually draws about 3,000 paid visitors, 200 exhibitors, 60 vendors and more than 300 volunteer workers.

"We have a lot of people with big collections, and this is a chance for them to show it off," Nusz said. "They may have something in the garage and never show it. They come from up to 100 miles around. They load up (their displays) and haul them here."

The MPHA members seek to share the history of their forefathers and way of life. The members believe in the preservation of the nation's rich heritage and to enable the experience of learning through living history.

As the owner of Menno Mercantile, Nusz works with machinery on a daily basis. His grandfather bought the business in 1919 and reflected the pioneer heritage that forms the foundation for the Power Show.

"My grandfather was a steamer. When he was 14 years old, he ran the steam engine," Nusz said. "He had to make sure the coal and water and everything was going. He had to get up pretty early in the morning. You didn't just flip a switch and turn a button."

The Power Show has become a year-round endeavor, but it's a labor of love, Nusz said.

"After this year's show is over, we start planning for next year," he said. "We have a few months during the wintertime, then we start working most of the summer. We cut grass and fix things, and the ladies are involved in cleaning."

The Power Show draws a mix of familiar faces and newcomers, Nusz said.

"A lot of the same people show up as well as people who see it advertised and have never been here," he said. "We are hearing from people from a long distance. One lady from Kansas said she is coming."

The show provides a step back in time, preserving valuable agricultural history, Nusz said.

"Many of our buildings are full of antiques, and people like to reminisce. It brings back some memories," he said. "Young people want to see what it was like, if they can believe the things that their grandpa was telling them."

ing data now that suggests one of the most important things to predict the outcome of those diseases is not the fancy drugs or technology — it's actually the relationships the patients have with their physician and other people involved in their health care."

Irby has done research on the outcomes of LICs and found that on 15 indicators, including patient care and development of communication skills, medical students completing such programs perform better than graduates of classical programs on everything but general medical knowledge. On that count, students score equally, he said.

The model has proven successful enough that Hansen said the Sanford School of Medicine is looking at converting its campuses in Rapid City and Sioux Falls to LICs.

Harding said that, in his short time in South Dakota, he has been impressed by how well people work together to solve challenges — precisely a skill that is needed to make a LIC function. He stated that he isn't surprised such a model found its beginnings in Yankton.

"You don't have to be in London or New York or other big cities to innovate and come up with new ideas," Harding said. "Medicine is a very inclusive field in that respect. If your idea is good enough and you've got the evidence to back it up, it doesn't matter where it's from."

Romney, Perry Go After Each Other In Republican Debate

BY PHILIP ELLIOTT

Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Standing mere paces apart, Republican presidential hopefuls Mitt Romney and Rick Perry sarcastically accused each other in a confrontational debate Thursday night of flip-flopping on Social Security and health care, flashpoints in their early struggle for the party nomination.

Romney accused Perry of having said the federal government "shouldn't be in the pension business, that it's unconstitutional," a reference to Social Security benefits.

The Texas governor disputed the charge, saying it "wasn't the first time Mitt's been wrong on some issue before." But Romney mocked his rival's denial, adding crisply, "You better find that Rick Perry and get him to stop saying that."

Perry soon returned the favor, saying that Romney switched his position on health care between editions of a book he had published. In one edition, Perry said, Romney advocated expanding the health care program he signed in Massachusetts to the rest of the country. "Then in your paperback you took that line out, so speaking of not getting it straight in your book, Sir."

"It's like badminton," said Perry. The Massachusetts legislation required residents of the state to purchase health coverage or pay a fine, a cornerstone of the law that President Barack Obama won from Congress last year that has inflamed conservative voters across the country.

The two men run one-two in the public opinion polls — Perry ahead, Romney a close second — and compete daily for endorsements from members of Congress and other party luminaries in hopes of gaining a permanent edge before the caucuses and primaries begin early next year.

Perry gave no ground on one issue — his support for a state law in Texas that gives the children of illegal immigrants

Santorum: 'Don't Ask, Don't Tell' Repeal Is Foolish

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Republican presidential candidate Rick Santorum says the end of the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy that barred gays and lesbians from serving openly is a social experiment pushed by Democrats.

Santorum on Thursday said the military has one responsibility: protecting the country. He says that allowing gays and lesbians to serve openly is a distraction to that role.

The former senator from Pennsylvania was responding to a video question from a gay soldier that yielded boos from the debate audience. Congress repealed the Clinton-era ban; it ended Tuesday.

Santorum says that "sex is not an issue" and the government should leave it alone. He also says he would not expel the soldier who asked the question.

reduced tuition to state colleges and universities.

"If you say that we should not educate children who have come into the state for no other reason than they've been brought there, by no fault of their own, I don't think you have a heart," he said.

That drew a retort from former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum. "No one is suggesting that students who are illegal in this country shouldn't go to colleges and universities," he said, adding that he objects to giving them state subsidies to do so.

"Most folks have to pay the full boat. ... Why should they be given preferential treatment as an illegal in this country?" he said.

Chrysler-UAW Talks Break Down

BY TOM KRISHER

AP Auto Writer

DETROIT — Negotiations over a new four-year contract between Chrysler and the United Auto Workers have broken down as both sides refuse to budge on key financial issues, two people briefed on the bargaining said Thursday.

The talks ended late Wednesday in a dispute over the number of workers who are paid an entry-level wage, said the people, who asked not to be identified because the negotiations are private.

Chrysler Group LLC, which is losing money, wants no limit on cheaper entry-level workers. The union wants a cap on the number of those workers, who make $14 to $16 an hour, about half of what a longtime union employee earns.

"There was a line drawn in the sand," one of the people said. "Somebody's going to have to give."

Chrysler factories continue to operate under a contract extension.

Detroit's three carmakers are each negotiating labor agreements with the UAW, which represents 113,000 workers at the companies. The new contracts would be the first since two of the automakers — GM and Chrysler — nearly collapsed during the recession and needed government bailouts in 2009. Ford Motor Co. didn't need a bailout but took billions in private loans to survive.

GM and the union agreed to a tentative contract last week. Chrysler was expected to be the second Detroit automaker to reach a deal.

Instead, Chrysler and UAW negotiating teams were sent home after the talks resulted in a stalemate. The union said it will now focus on talks with Ford. No more bargaining with Chrysler is scheduled.
