ther upstream, was cleaning up debris, Bertsch said.

"The biggest impact here on the lakes side was all the logs and reeds that kept washing up," he said. "It was hazardous for boaters. We devoted beach cleaning two times a week just to keep it open as best we could. Boating traffic was about half of what it was in previous years."

Even with what he called a "completely successful" Labor Day weekend, Bertsch said he believes a sluggish economy played a role in lower visitation numbers.

"It seemed like less of a vacation type of a summer and more of a weekend outing and leaving-right-away type of thing," he said.

With still time to perhaps have some of those camping numbers climb back up, Bertsch said GF&P is optimistic for a strong finish.

"We still have a couple good weeks of camping left, so we're hoping to get a few of those numbers back," he said. "This time of the year is very peaceful and the weather is still halfway decent."
