tumes," Jackson said.

Andy Henrickson, the associate professor of speech and theatre at Mount Marty College, said he has wanted to do more play readings as a way to expose students to new work while not having the associated production costs of a full-fledged performance.

"It gives our students a different experience," he said. "It's very accessible to them, because it's two or three rehearsals and then you read it. I thought that would be a good thing for our students."

The arrangement to bring Jackson to the campus was made through Stephen English, the instructor of theatre design and the technical director for theatre at Mount Marty College. He and Jackson are friends.

Currently, there are no definite plans to put on a production of "The Dark Side of the Snow." However, Jackson said he hopes to make that a reality some day.

"The weird thing is, the play actually works better in Yankton than in Toronto because people in Toronto don't know much about Theodore Roosevelt, let alone his family," he said. "I'd love to do a production of it. It's got a very unique set design, and I'd love to see it on stage. More than likely, if I'd ever get the chance to perform it, it would be in the States."

Jackson said he wastes the audience to walk away from the reading with a better appreciation for the Roosevelt family and an inspiration to tell their own stories.

"I'm hoping that people will go out and search for those little stories that exist but sometimes don't get told because people might be afraid of them or ashamed," he stated.

Burns

"A man would get to a saloon, get drunk, and he would come home and do whatever he wanted," historian Catherine Gilbert Murdock says in an on-screen interview.

The second installment, "A Nation of Scofflaws," examines the problems of enforcement during Prohibition, and the third part, "A Nation of Hypocrites," covers the movement toward repeal in 1933. Along the way, viewers are treated to stunning archival footage and introduced to a variety of vivid characters. Among those who jumped out at Burns was George Remus, a Midwest attorney, bootlegger and notorious party animal who used loopholes in the Volstead Act to become a millionaire.

"He's a phenomenal character — a modern megalomaniac in the vein of a Donald Trump," Burns said. "I can't believe that, once this comes out, people in Hollywood won't want to make a film about George Remus. You couldn't make him up."

Hollywood's interest in bootlegger gangsters is, of course, on full display in the HBO Prohibition-era crime drama, "Boardwalk Empire," which also airs Sunday. Burns counts himself among its fans.

"I've really enjoyed watching it. It's terrific," he said. "Americans always love to watch people who get to kill people that (tick) them off, and women who take their clothes off at the drop of a hat."

Rooney

ment. Within a few months, "A Few Minutes With Andy Rooney" had proved a hit with viewers.

The segment's ultra-simple format became a familiar — and sometimes parodied — TV signpost. Wearing a rumpled suit, the pear-shaped Rooney would sit, hands folded, at his desk in what appeared to be his rather cramped and cluttered CBS office, speaking directly into the camera. His typical jowly, bemused expression would occasionally curl into an outright smile, but just as often he would raise his voice slightly during his rants on random topics, the sort of free-range target practice that these days routinely turns up on Twitter.

Sometimes the matters were ones of consequence; more often, not. One characteristic piece faulted coffeemakers for putting fewer ounces than advertised of grounds in each can. "I don't really have any right to complain," he then concluded wryly. "The actual content of '60 Minutes' is now less than 42 minutes."

"I don't even know if they could replace him?" Doug Spero, an associate professor of mass communication at Meredith College in North Carolina, wrote of Rooney in an email. "He was the true representative of trivial matters. Common everyday things got his attention and common everyday things frustrated him, just like many of his viewers, who could relate."

Elton John Starts 3-Year Las Vegas Run At Caesars

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Elton John has returned to Las Vegas for a three-year headlining gig at Caesars Palace.
