OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A Mexican national has been sentenced to five months in federal prison for using a California man's identity to get a job in Nebraska.

U.S. Attorney Deborah Gilg (gilg) says 29-year-old Roberto Jacinto-Velasquez, of Acapulco, Mexico, was sentenced Wednesday by federal Judge Laurie Smith Camp.

Gilg says Jacinto fraudulently used the ID to secure and retain employment at Nebraska Beef Ltd. in Omaha from December 2010 until May 2011. In addition to his prison term, Jacinto will serve two years of supervised release following his release from prison.

Gilg says Jacinto was one of several people working at the Omaha meatpacking plant flagged in January as using questionable identity documents by U.S. Department of Homeland Security investigators.

2nd Cain Ex-Staffer On Unemployment

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — A second former staffer for Herman Cain's presidential campaign in Iowa has been granted unemployment benefits.

Cain's Iowa director Tina Goff of Johnston resigned June 30 along with others who were upset with campaign strategy. An administrative law judge last week granted Goff's appeal for unemployment benefits after the campaign declined to contest her claim. A campaign lawyer stipulated that Goff was eligible, which means she quit for good reason.

The campaign's former Iowa straw poll coordinator, Kevin Hall, was earlier granted benefits. He testified he quit after it became clear Cain would not spend as much time campaigning in Iowa as Hall had been promised and alleged he was asked to mislead supporters about the role of an adviser who is gay.

No listing for Goff could be found.

Man Pleads Guilty To Screwdriver Assault

SIOUX FALLS (AP) — A South Dakota man had pleaded guilty to puncturing a woman's face with a screwdriver.

U.S. Attorney Brendan Johnson says 41-year-old Warren Barondeaux, of Eagle Butte, pleaded guilty Tuesday to a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon.

Prosecutors say Barondeaux used a screwdriver to puncture the woman's face and head after she tried to intervene during a fight between Barondeaux and his girlfriend in March. The woman had a wound to her face and lacerations to the back of her head.

Barondeaux faces 10 years in prison when he is sentenced on Dec. 19.

Suspicious Package In Sioux City Is Empty

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (AP) — A suspicious package found at the federal building in Sioux City has turned out to be empty.

KTIV-TV is reporting (http://bit.ly/ozONOK) that the package was found outside the federal building just before 8 a.m. Thursday. Police blocked off the area around the building as a precaution.

The package was in a secure area and barricades were put in place so it could be inspected.

The package was found to be empty and not a threat at about 9:30 a.m.

Bull Moose Spotted Near Minatare, Neb.

MINATARE, Neb. (AP) — A bull moose has been sighted near Minatare in Scotts Bluff County.

KNEB reported (http://bit.ly/plpMnC) that the moose was seen about 5 a.m. near Highland School, northeast of Minatare.

Resident Randy Burbach says he saw the animal as he was pulling out of his driveway. The animal's antlers were about three-feet wide and Burbach says it stepped over a barbed-wire fence "like it wasn't even there."

Burbach tells KNEB it's the first time he's seen a bull moose in the area and it got his adrenaline going a little.

Small Neb. Town Braces For Big Pipeline Hearing

BY GRANT SCHULTE
Associated Press

ATKINSON, Neb. — Bruce Boettcher strolls over a hilltop in desolate Nebraska ranching country, stares down at the tightly packed sand around his boot, clenches his jaw and kicks a fistful into the breeze.

Four generations have worked the land where 55-year-old rancher tends cattle. His rolling, sunburnt 480 acres sit atop the Ogallala aquifer, an underground water supply that has become ground zero in a national fight over the Obama administration's environmental and economic priorities.

The latest showdown unfolded Thursday in a high school gymnasium in the north-central Nebraska town of Atkinson, a farming and ranching community near the Keystone XL pipeline's proposed route. The line operated by Calgary-based TransCanada would carry tar sands oil over the Canadian border and through six states on its way to Texas refineries. U.S. State Department officials are holding hearings this week in Montana, South Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Texas before they decide whether to grant a federal permit.

Boettcher said he is angry that TransCanada, in his view, has pitted neighbors against one another and tried to quietly rush the project toward approval. A U.S. State Department environmental report has found no major concerns with the project, but opponents question its objectivity.

"They have scientists, they have geologists, they have the EPA, and they find nothing wrong here," Boettcher said. "But the people who live here know more. It's not because we have some title and a name tag. We work with this land. We know what you can do and what you can't do. And this is not one of the things you should not be doing."

Pipeline supporters point to U.S. State Department studies and other water experts who insist the project is safe. Business groups and unions have welcomed the project as a major job-creator that will reduce the nation's dependence on Middle East oil. But the pipeline has drawn fierce opposition from an unlikely coalition of farmers, ranchers and environmental groups who fear it will leak and contaminate the Ogallala aquifer, which supplies drinking and irrigation water to eight states.

Supporters and top TransCanada executives have said the criticism is baseless, and an attempt to stir fears for political gain.

About 300 spectators filled the West Holt High School gymnasium on Thursday, hoping to sway State Department officials before they decide whether to allow the $7 billion project to proceed.

Ron Kaminski, business manager for the Omaha-based Laborers' Local 1140, said calls to reroute the line were a stall tactic. Union supporters arrived in busloads from Nebraska and other states. Pipeline critics have said TransCanada paid the union members to attend, an allegation several members declined to confirm.

"We believe deeply in the jobs this will create," Kaminski said. "We believe deeply in the relationship we have had with TransCanada for years. Unfortunately, not everyone in this room has had the opportunity to work with TransCanada."

On Thursday, as both sides held back-to-back press conferences, Terry Frisch rumbled through the Sandhills in a red, dust-caked Chevy pick-up. The 64-year-old Republican and part-time rancher said he seldom agrees with environmentalists, and has never participated in such a large political fight.

But Frisch said he joined the opposition because parts of his land sit within inches of the top of the underground water table. In the summer, he said, his property often floods.

"It isn't going to affect us near as it's going to affect our kids and their kids," he said. "It's going to be a long-term effect."

Frisch pulled into a pasture with a fellow rancher, Todd Cone, to show how close the water sits to the surface. Cone jammed a post-hole digger into the sandy soil, tossed several loads aside and pointed to the water 18 inches below.

University of Nebraska scientists have differed on whether the pipeline poses a risk. John Stansbury, a water resources engineer, has urged the State Department to deny the permit because of environmental concerns. But emeritus professor Jim Goeke, a hydrogeologist, has said critic claims are false and the pipeline is safe.
