Park

"Everything will be up a little bit from last year because of the flooding we experienced," he said. "We also have been measuring back to 2010, which was the prior record season."

When looking back to 2010, the numbers at Chief White Crane and Pierson Ranch are right about at where they were that year. However, Lewis and Clark camping numbers are up 4.4 percent from 2010.

"When we break 5 percent increases at Lewis and Clark from the previous year, we are really having a fantastic year, so we shouldn't really be complaining about these numbers," Van Meeteren said. "It's been a long and great season so far."

He added that the number of campers at the park this year made 2012 the best year they've ever had.

"We had a fantastic Labor Day weekend, and there are still a lot of people looking to camp this fall," Van Meeteren said. "Nothing this fall should change the record numbers that we've experienced this season."

He added that the hot weather through the summer and fall has not deterred anyone from visiting the park.

"Overall there was just a huge pent up demand for people to get outside this year because of last years flooding," he said. "The summer got off to one of the earliest starts we've ever had, which helped the numbers we saw."

Despite the still struggling economy, Van Meeteren said people will still come out and enjoy the park.

"No matter where the economy is, people still put a high priority on family time and on their recreational time," he said. "Fortunately for us, the economy is not making a big dent in our numbers. People might not come as often, but they might stay longer to compensate for that. The bad economy does not seem to be hurting us too much."

Van Meeteren added that the high gas prices also don't seem to be deterring people from getting outside and getting to the recreational areas around the region.

"There are things people can do to make the adjustment to the bad economy," he noted. "The economy really doesn't seem to have slowed people down from getting outside."

He said that the flooding from last year, more so than this year's hot and dry weather, drove traffic to the lake this year. He added that weather does not influence numbers as much as people think it does.

"People get it in their heads that they're going to go on vacation and tend to roll with it and don't typically cancel," Van Meeteren said. "Flooding like we saw last year really only happens once in a great while."

He said there are benefits to both the park and the community when campers visit the recreation area.

"The average night stay to Lewis and Clark has grown from just a weekend to three- four- or five-night stays," he said. "Generally, you can only stay in the park and entertain yourself for two days, then you're going to start to venture out into the community and see what there is to do."

People will go out and explore the other businesses around the area, including the mall, restaurants and other attractions in Yankton.

"We really like to promote the local activities," Van Meeteren said. "It gives campers something to do, so chances are they'll stay at the park longer. It really becomes a win-win situation for both the community and the park."

He added that the prediction for a warmer, dry fall will only bode well for the numbers of campers to Lewis and Clark this fall.

"If the weather prediction holds true, we should have a good fall," he said. "The only thing that slows fall numbers down is if there is a good, hard freeze and so far I haven't heard anyone talk about that yet."

Congress

creases on wealthier earners and that Republicans will be more willing to compromise.

"I believe that once the elections are over, the tea party's strength will be significantly weakened," Reid added.

Reid's GOP counterpart, Minority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, let the cat out of the bag just minutes after Reid's remarks. He said the six-month spending bill, called a continuing resolution in Washington lingo, would be the last order of business until the postelection lame duck session in November.

McConnell told reporters that Reid "has indicated to us that the continuing resolution would be the last item of this work period."

The House is set to pass the continuing resolution on Thursday, which means the Senate would pass the measure next week before making its getaway.

On the food and farm bill impasse, McConnell said: "I don't believe that we ought to let the current farm bill expire if we're unable at this point to pass a replacement." Hope for that is fading however; Congress is instead on track to fund food stamps through the continuing resolution.

Sunday, September 12, 1937 No paper.	Wednesday, September 12, 1962 Some 130-140 persons are expected here for the 28th annual meeting of the South Dakota Water and Sewage Works Conference and third annual meetings of the South Dakota sections of the American Water Works Association and Water Pollution Control Federation being held today through Friday at the Hotel Charles Gurney. With the opening of classes only a few days away, a housing shortage has become apparent at Yankton college. Off-campus housing, within a reasonable walking distance of the college, to accommodate about thirty upperclassmen will be needed, George L. Morris, dean of students and registrar, said today.	Saturday, September 12, 1987 Wilbur and Elizabeth Foss, Yankton, are the first inductees from South Dakota into the Mid America Fiddlers Hall of Fame. The Yankton couple was awarded a plaque Sept. 6 at the Music Festival in Avoca, Iowa. Yankton city commissioners will consider a proposal Monday that would restrict parking to one side on some of the city's narrower streets.
