Drought

the state, the area in extreme drought rose slightly. Conditions improved in Missouri, where the area deemed to be in extreme or exceptional drought dropped more than 6 percentage points, to 25.20 percent. The land area in the lower 48 states in extreme or exceptional drought remained at about 21 percent. Storms that rumbled across portions of the Corn Belt in recent weeks from Hurricane Isaac's fallout and subsequent storms have contributed moisture that growers say could benefit still-maturing soybean fields. As of Monday, the USDA said 15 percent of the nation's corn crop had been brought it from the fields, three times the five-year average. The harvesting is more than halfway completed in Missouri, where this time each year just 15 percent of the corn has been reaped. Farmers have harvested 41 percent of their corn in Kansas, 21 percent in Illinois, 12 percent in Nebraska and 10 percent in Iowa. Fifty-two percent of the nation's corn crop was listed as being in poor or very poor shape as of Monday, unchanged from a week earlier, the USDA said. Soybean harvests are just 4 percent complete, with 36 percent of that overall crop considered poor or very poor, just 1 percent better than a week earlier. In its crop-expectation update Wednesday, the USDA kept its estimate of the total area of corn harvested for grain at 87.4 million acres, bucking predictions from some analysts that the figure would drop given reports of farmers chopping down underdeveloped corn plants to feed their livestock. But the yield per acre estimate this month dropped from 123 bushels last month to 122.8 bushels. Farmers planted more corn this year than in any other since 1937, meaning that despite one of the nation's worst droughts in decades the U.S. is expected to produce its eighth largest corn crop on record. Total corn production for this season is now forecast at 10.73 billion bushels, down slightly from last month's estimate. Farmers planted about 96 million acres in corn, a large increase from just a decade ago when less than 80 million acres were planted. Wednesday's report is expected to stabilize corn prices, which have been at near record highs, and to help farmers who depend on the grain to feed livestock. Soybean production was projected at 2.63 billion bushels in the report, down 58 million from last month's estimate due to lower yields in the Midwest.

Kinship Appreciation, Awareness Recognized

PIERRE — Gov. Dennis Daugaard has declared the month of September as Kinship Appreciation and Awareness Month in South Dakota to recognize the many families who have opened their homes to care for their kin in times of need. Kinship care is a living situation in which a relative takes primary responsibility for the care of a family member, most often a child or elderly individual. Kinship care enables family members to live with people they know and trust, provides a sense of hope, and reinforces the family member's sense of personal and cultural identity. "We look for family members first and foremost to care for those who are found in an unsafe environment," said Kim Malsam-Rysdon, Secretary of the Department of Social Services. "Families serve as the primary source of love, identity and support." The month of September continues as a time to honor and recognize kinship care, promoting awareness to those who play a valuable role in supporting children and elderly individuals in South Dakota. To learn more about kinship care, contact your local Department of Social Services office, or visit www.dss.sd.gov.

PSAHL-KOSTEL FUNERAL HOME & CREMATORY INC.
Guiding and serving families with compassion and trust.

"During the process of planning the funeral for my husband Rich, Tami assured us we could call anytime day or night. That was really nice to know, because we did have questions and concerns and all we had to do was give them a call and we got things figured out. It was very comforting knowing that they were taking care of my husband. And now he's watching over us."

It was reassuring to know that Opsahl-Kostel Funeral Home & Crematory was there for us, guiding us through a very difficult time.
