for sending ground troops "in the event Syria imploded" or to prevent its chemical weapons cache from falling into the hands of a terrorist organization.

"President Obama is not asking America to go to war," Kerry said in a strongly worded opening statement. He added, "This is not the time for armchair isolationism. This is not the time to be spectators to slaughter."

Obama said earlier in the day he was open to revisions in the relatively broad request the White House made over the weekend. He expressed confidence Congress would respond to his call for support and said Assad's action "poses a serious national security threat to the United States and to the region."

The administration says 1,429 died from the attack on Aug. 21 in a Damascus suburb. Casualty estimates by other groups are far lower, and Assad's government blames the episode on rebels who have been seeking to overthrow his government in a civil war that began over two years ago. A United Nations inspection team is awaiting lab results on tissue and soil samples it collected while in the country before completing a closely watched report.

The president met top lawmakers at the White House before embarking on an overseas trip to Sweden and Russia, leaving the principal lobbying at home for the next few days to Vice President Joe Biden and other members of his administration.

Kerry, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel and Gen. Martin Dempsey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, sat shoulder-to-shoulder at the Senate committee hearing while, a few hundred miles away, United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon urged caution. He said any punitive action against Syria could unleash more turmoil and bloodshed, and he advised that such strikes would be legal only in self-defense under the U.N. Charter or if approved by the organization's Security Council. Russia and China have repeatedly used their veto power in the council to block action against Assad.

In the Middle East, Israel and the U.S. conducted a joint missile test over the Mediterranean in a display of military might in the region. Obama set the fast-paced events in motion on Saturday, when he unexpectedly stepped back from ordering a military strike under his own authority and announced he would seek congressional approval.

Recent presidents have all claimed the authority to undertake limited military action without congressional backing. Some have followed up with such action. Obama said he, too, believes he has that authority, and House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi said during the day that even Congress' refusal to authorize the president wouldn't negate the

UMass Students Feast On 15,000-Pound Fruit Salad

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — In what's become an annual tradition, the University of Massachusetts celebrated the start of the new academic year with a delicious, healthy, record-breaking dish.

About 500 students and staff at the Amherst campus on Monday sliced, diced, pitted and peeled 150 varieties of fruit to create a salad weighing more than 15,000 pounds. The salad was mixed in a 15-foot diameter swimming pool.

provider which is now Dakota Milestones of Chamberlain.

As secretary, Pearson will oversee all divisions of the DHS including the Guardianship Program, the Division of Developmental Disabilities, rehabilitation services, the Division of Services to the Blind and Visually Impaired and the South Dakota Developmental Center in Redfield. The position is appointed by the governor.

"I was fortunate enough to be contacted by someone in the governor's cabinet," she said. "After some consideration, I replied that I would be interested."

Pearson said she will do her best to further the DHS' strategic plan.

"I'm familiar with the strategic plan that the Department of Human Services has in place now and I fully support all the goals that it entails," Pearson said. "I think they're excellent and I know an important piece of the work is employment for people with disabilities as a priority."

According to the DHS website, other parts of the strategic plan include "promoting self advocacy in planning individualized services and supports that result in positive outcomes, providing education and awareness, providing the highest level of service within available resources" and "recruiting, training and retaining a knowledgeable and prepared workforce, inclusive of qualified people with disabilities."

Pearson said her experience with ABS has been important in preparing her to take on the new role.

"I've had wonderful experience here and over the last 13 years," she said. "We've worked with the department to move forward in a lot of areas and achieving goals here at ABS. That partnership with the department has really helped to prepare me for the position."

Beyond ABS, Pearson said she's worked closely with DHS throughout her 25-year career in disability services.

izing Obama to use force. But he said it also wouldn't be helpful to amend the resolution in a way that constrains the president too much to execute military action, if authorized.

He made his prediction that the White House would get its way in an exchange with Kerry in which he said Obama should agree to abide by Congress' decision, rather than reserve the right to order a strike even if the vote goes against him.

Democrats, too, were divided, although it appeared the administration's biggest concern was winning support among deeply conservative Republicans who have battled with the president on issue after issue since winning con-
