eastern two-thirds of the country, Foster said. The forecast calls for above-normal chances for precipitation across the Northern Plains and the northern Midwest. October calls for above-normal temperatures and precipitation in the Plains and Midwest, Foster said. "We expect areas of drought to persist," he said. "There will be improvement in some areas on the periphery of the Midwest and Great Plains." Foster sees some good news for the Great Plains. "Over a longer period of time, the message is clear that we have a very rapid and intensifying dryness in the Midwest and some relief as we move further out into the Plains," he said. Another speaker on Thursday's conference called at the drought's impact on the fall harvest. "We have seen a resur-

Jones said he also could face a few mixed emotions, as he not only played football at SDSU, but also was a grad assistant strength and conditioning coach there from 2007-09 before joining Nebraska. "I watch SDSU and check the scores on a weekly basis because that's my alma mater," he said. "But at the end of the day, I want Nebraska to win." Jones and Spencer said this weekend's game against the Jackrabbits is especially important for the momentum of the season, as Nebraska suffered a tough 41-21 loss to UCLA last week. Both feel that the team will be hospital with non-life-threatening injuries. The incident was reported at 3:48 p.m. "It sounds like the juvenile had just left school," said Chief Deputy Sheriff Mike Rothschadl. "The two ladies were parked along the northbound lane and walking across the street." The driver told investigators he was adjusting his radio when the accident occurred. The speed limit along that portion of West City Limits Road is 45 mph. In addition to the sheriff's office, the Yankton Police Department, Yankton County EMS, the Yankton Fire Department and the South Dakota Highway Patrol were at the scene. The incident is under investigation by the Yankton County Sheriff's Office.

gence of drought in the short term, which will affect a good chunk of the Corn Belt. As we head to the west, the drought becomes increasingly long term," said Brad Rippey from the Joint Agricultural Weather Facility. The facility, housed at the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), was formed in 1978 by the World Board and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA). According to the U.S. Drought Monitor, approximately 55 percent of the U.S. corn production area lies within drought areas, Rippey said. The Central Plains region remains a major corn producer, with 85 percent of the U.S. corn crop traditionally coming from the region, he added. The 55 percent of the nation's corn crop in drought areas represents a sharp increase from the low mark of 17 percent in July, Rippey said. Even with the increasingly dry conditions, this year's corn crop looks much more promising than last year, he noted.

able to rebound after the defeat, despite any distractions encountered this week. Following the Huskers loss last Saturday, numerous fans and former Nebraska players criticized the team's performance through social media. Monday also saw the release of audio of Nebraska Head Coach Bo Pelini venting about fans and media members following a game in 2011. "We've always talked about how you can't let outside distractions pull the team apart, and you're seeing that right now with our guys," Jones said. "They're sticking together and they're working hard." Added Spencer, "With everything people have been saying about the team, I think they're going to come out focused and motivated for the rest of the season."

"Nationally, 18 percent of the U.S. corn crop is very poor to poor," he said. "Last year, it was 50 percent." Meanwhile, 45 percent of the nation's soybeans are located in drought areas, Rippey said. In addition, 53 percent of the nation's domestic cattle inventory is located in drought areas. This year's late-planted crops will need to deal with the possibility of a frost and freeze situation, Rippey said. "This time of year, the temperatures are low enough to be a concern for immature corn," he said. Late-planted soybeans could take even more of a hit than corn, he said. The dry conditions aren't likely to subside anytime soon, Foster said. "During the fall and winter months, it should remain relatively dry," he said. "If there is above-normal precipitation, it won't be to an extent big enough to recharge in those (drought) areas." You can follow Randy Dockendorf on Twitter at twitter.com/RDockendorf. The senior said he looks forward to assisting the team in that effort, as he will continue to work with the players through the spring, when he is scheduled to graduate in May. After earning his degree, Spencer plans to attend graduate school and focus on careers in training and athletic administration. He said that not only has his time with the football team been enjoyable, but it also has given him valuable experience that he will use in pursuing his goals. "It's a lot of stress and a lot of hard work, but it's worth it in the end," he said. You can follow Derek Bartos on Twitter at twitter.com/d_bartos/. Discuss this story at www.yankton.net/.
