Case

"There is a lot of stuff that we looked at, and that we taped and we bagged and will be shipping off to the lab," Limoges said. "As far as identifying specifics, I can't do that."

The sheriff refused to speculate on exactly how the vehicle, and perhaps, its occupants, ended up in the creek over 40 years ago.

"What we need to do is go by facts," he said. "I did make contact with the family this afternoon by phone, and advised them that there has been human remains recovered. I believe that makes them feel a lot better that we were able to be successful in recovering some items."

Skeletal remains were collected from both inside the car and from the area of the vehicle as it lay submerged in the creek. According to the release from the attorney general's office, no further information will be released until a requested autopsy and further testing is complete and family members properly notified.

Limoges said, while answering a reporter's inquiry, that he hopes the investigation will be able to determine whether the car entered the creek by the bridge, or perhaps was driven into the water further upstream and over the years drifted to the point it was found Monday.

He said some work was done at the bridge recently to repair an embankment. "I also know that in the spring, we received about seven inches of rainfall, and we had a lot of water coming through that creek," Limoges said. "I think the combination of the water amount, and now that the level is low, obviously it unearthed the vehicle."

He said no one can truly explain how the car, after being missing for over four decades, became visible to a fisherman at the bridge this week.

"You know ... the father was just put to rest here recently ... who knows? It's definitely something that I can't explain, but many of us are happy that we were able to recover this," Limoges said.

The sheriff was referring to Pam Jackson's father, who died last week at the age of 102. His funeral was Saturday. The car was found Monday. Jackley noted during a Monday press conference that many family members who had traveled to southeastern South Dakota for the funeral were still in the area, and were able to view the car accompanied by law enforcement officials shortly after it was discovered in the creek.

Limoges said he and others who were involved in this week's work at the creek are hoping the families of the two girls can finally receive some degree of closure. "At least the unknown can be answered, and of course, with questions being answered, there are more questions."

The disappearance of the Vermillion High School juniors was one of the initial investigations of South Dakota's cold case unit. The unit was formed in June 2004 to focus on unsolved suspicious deaths and disappearances.

A September 2004 search of a Union County farm turned up bones, clothing, a purse, photographs, newspaper articles and other items, but not the car. Authorities have not ever said if the bones recovered were the girls' - or even whether they were human remains.

In a warrant authorizing the search, authorities said that David Lykken, who lived at the farm in 1971 and was a classmate of the girls, might have been involved in their disappearance. Lykken, 59, is in prison serving an unrelated 227-year sentence for rape and kidnapping.

In July 2007, a Union County grand jury indicted Lykken on two counts of premeditated murder, two counts of felony murder and two counts of murder in the disappearance of Miller and Jackson. But state prosecutors dropped all six murder charges after discovering a prison informant made up a supposed admission.

Limoges was asked, at the end of Tuesday's press conference, if he suspects the girls may have been the victims of foul play or an accident.

"Hopefully, by the end of this investigation, we can answer those questions," he said.
