

Yankton Co. 4-H Members Score At State 4-H Shot

MITCHELL — The Fall State 4-H Shot witnessed a 40 percent increase in participation Sept. 12-13, making it the largest Shotgun and Muzzleloading competition for South Dakota 4-H to date.

Nearly 250 youth registered for the weekend's events, which included muzzleloading, trap, skeet and sporting clays. Saturday shooters dealt with a variety of weather conditions, especially in the afternoon, when winds gusted to 30 mph. The targets were entertaining to watch, but very unpredictable. Sunday was clear and calm, with only the final skeet flights in danger of weather concerns.

Overall, 28,000 shots were successfully fired over the weekend, overseen by certified coaches and the fabulous volunteer staff at the Mitchell Gun Club.

state investigations or alleged criminal activity was known publicly until after his death.

The alleged criminal activity involving an EB-5 project happened at the end of Rounds' administration in December 2010 and in January 2011 as Daugaard took office as governor. Daugaard was Rounds' lieutenant governor.

State Attorney General Marty Jackley divulged on July 29 this year that he was ready to arrest Benda last October and had scheduled a state grand jury for later that month. Benda died before the grand jury could meet.

No one has been criminally charged. Jackley, who was appointed by Rounds in 2009, investigated Benda at the request of Daugaard regarding billings for trips to China. Jackley found two questionable financial transactions of greater significance. Benda allegedly increased the amount of a state grant by $550,000 that was eventually provided to Northern Beef Processors at Aberdeen. Meanwhile Northern Beef acknowledged making a $550,000 payment to SDRC Inc.

SDRC was the Aberdeen company run by Bollen that managed the EB-5 foreign investor program for state government starting in 2009. Benda signed the state contract with SDRC while he was state secretary of tourism and state development for Rounds.

Benda went to work for SDRC in 2011 as a loan monitor on the Northern Beef project after Daugaard didn't retain him in the new administration.

Rounds said in his responses this week to the legislative committee that he had "no knowledge" of the funds Benda allegedly diverted.

Rounds further said he is "not aware" of any discussion between anyone in state government and Northern Beef concerning the $550,000 transaction.

Rounds signed a grant in December 2010 for $1 million to reimburse Northern Beef for expenses in its project.

According to Rory King, a lawyer for Northern Beef, the company was required under an agreement with SDRC to provide $550,000 to SDRC for a loan monitor. Northern Beef was receiving EB-5 financing through SDRC.

A second grant made by Rounds to the South Dakota Development Corporation in late 2010 meanwhile was increased by $550,000.

It hasn't been publicly determined whether Benda acted alone in adding the $550,000.

The development corporation, a quasi-government agency that makes business loans and grants to projects, then forwarded the grant to Northern Beef.

Rounds said in his answers to legislators that he wasn't involved in the "specific transactional details" of the contract agreement reached between Benda and Bollen in 2009 for SDRC.

Private attorneys for Bollen and Benda assembled the contract. Jackley said the attorney general's office wasn't involved and generally hasn't been allowed to participate in state economic-development matters under recent governors.

The five-year contract gave SDRC private management and administrative control of the EB-5 program for state government. The Daugaard administration terminated the SDRC contract last September after learning results from Jackley's investigation.

EB-5 is a federally authorized program that allows foreign investors who loan or invest at least $500,000 apiece in job-creation projects to be considered for visas that allow them and their families to live anywhere in the United States.

The Daugaard administration isn't seeking any new EB-5 projects.

Daugaard publicly released his answers to the committee's questions late Monday afternoon. In many instances he referred the questions to the Rounds administration or the attorney general.
