Jury Indicts 3 In Sioux Falls Sex Trafficking Cases

SIoux FALLS, S.D. (AP) — A federal grand jury indicted three people on sex trafficking charges in two separate cases in Sioux Falls.

Michael Lee Dickey, 35, is accused of injecting a woman with drugs and forcing her into prostitution. The indictment filed Monday charges Dickey with sex trafficking by force, fraud and coercion and alleges that the victim had been trafficked for more than a year in Sioux Falls, according to the Argus Leader.

Police say that on the night of July 13, Dickey and the victim were in a fight in which the woman was punched and kicked in the head several times. She told officers that Dickey had forced her to have sex with other men more than 100 times during a period of several months.

Dickey's attorney, Eric DeNure, didn't immediately respond to a phone message seeking comment.

The case against Dickey had been moved from state court. He is being held in jail on $100,000 cash bond.

In a separate case, a federal grand jury indicted Jerrid Lee Morris, 25, and Duwanda Annette Smiley, 32, on charges of sex trafficking by force, fraud and coercion.

They were arrested after detectives with the Sioux Falls street crimes unit placed an online sex-for-money ad in August.

Morris and Smiley are accused of trafficking three women, two of whom are 18. Prosecutors allege that Morris began a relationship with the victims when they were juveniles and had a sexual relationship with at least one of them. One of the victims told police that she feared for her life if she did not go through with the sex acts.

Smiley is being held in jail on $100,000 bond. Morris is being held on $250,000 cash bond.

Judith Zeigler, the attorney representing Morris and Smiley, also didn't respond to a call seeking comment.

so there is a nice flow to it."

Another portion of the gallery was dedicated to Art Advocate of the Year Pam Kallis. It shows some of the custom pieces she has created for multiple productions in her 20 years of dedication to the Yankton School District's theatrical program.

This exhibition is also the last push for the Modify Dotify house display. It is a large playhouse that was painted white. For each stop at G.A.R. Hall, visitors had the opportunity to place colorful, dot stickers anywhere on the house. With all the minds of the Yankton community at work, the project is almost completely covered.

"We feature professional artists throughout the year," Amsberry said. "This is really focused on our classes we are teaching, our outreach into the community and our advocacy."

Appeals Court Says Drugs Found In Car Search Can Be Evidence

MARGERY A. BECK

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Illegal drugs found in a police search of a man's car during a Nebraska traffic stop can be used as evidence against him, a federal appeals court found Thursday, despite a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in April that said the search was unconstitutional.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals based its ruling Thursday on a 2011 U.S. Supreme Court decision that said searches relying on binding precedent are permissible, even if such searches are later deemed unconstitutional by the high court.

It's the second time the 8th U.S. Circuit has affirmed a federal judge's decision to allow the evidence in the drug case against Denny Rodriguez. Rodriguez pleaded guilty in 2012 on the condition that he could withdraw the plea if he succeeded on his appeal to have the evidence thrown out.

Rodriguez was stopped on a Nebraska highway in 2012 and issued a warning for driving on the shoulder. He was then made to wait about 10 minutes after the warning was issued while officers walked a drug-sniffing dog around the car — over Rodriguez's objections. The dog alerted, and a search turned up methamphetamine in the car.

Last year, the 8th Circuit concluded — based on long-held precedent — that prolonging the stop by several minutes for the dog sniff was a permissible intrusion on Rodriguez's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure.

But in a split decision, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned that finding, saying that police may not extend an ordinary traffic stop to seek evidence of crimes unrelated to the offense that prompted officers to pull a vehicle over. The high court vacated the 8th Circuit's first judgment and sent the case back to the appellate court.

On Thursday, the 8th Circuit again affirmed the allowance of the drug evidence, citing the 2011 Supreme Court decision.

"The magistrate judge, the district court, and this court all determined that the seven- or eight-minute delay in this case constituted a de minimis intrusion on Rodriguez's personal liberty and that Rodriguez's seizure was lawful under our then binding precedent," Judge Roger L. Wollman wrote for the three-judge appellate panel. "(T)herefore, the exclusionary rule does not apply because the circumstances of Rodriguez's seizure fell squarely within our case law, and the search was conducted in objectively reasonable reliance on our precedent."

John Higgins with the U.S. Attorney's Office declined to comment on specifics of Thursday's ruling, saying only that his office was pleased with it.

Rodriguez's federal public defender, David Stickman, did not return phones messages Thursday seeking comment.

UNK Reaches Settlement In Housing Lawsuit

GRANT SCHULTE

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — The University of Nebraska at Kearney has agreed to enact new student housing policies and pay $140,000 to settle a Justice Department lawsuit that accused the university of violating federal law by not allowing therapy animals in student housing.

The settlement filed Thursday follows a 2011 lawsuit on a behalf of a former student, Brittany Hamilton, who had asked to keep a dog in her university apartment to cope with depression and anxiety.

The university maintains that it never violated any laws, but Chancellor Doug Kristensen said UNK settled to avoid a costly lawsuit and move forward with a new policy that ensures all students have equal access to housing.

"I'm only disappointed that our sincere efforts to negotiate through the court were not reciprocated," Kristensen said in a statement. "We could have avoided hundreds of thousands of dollars spent on litigation and electronic discovery and deployed those funds toward what UNK does best — providing access and supporting success for all of our valued students, including those with disabilities."

Messages left with the Justice Department were not immediately returned.

Under the settlement, the university will adopt policies that allow students to apply for "reasonable accommodations" in their housing. Students without an obvious disability may be required to provide a doctor or medical professional's note saying the pet is necessary.

The university had previously banned pets other than fish from its housing unless a student had a disability such as blindness that required a service animal.

Hamilton had asked to keep a 4-pound miniature pinscher named Butch in her apartment but was denied. The Justice Department lawsuit alleged that Hamilton could not afford other housing options in or around Kearney, and needed the dog to focus on her school work.

An Omaha nurse prescribed the dog to help her handle anxiety attacks that made it difficult to sleep and breathe. Hamilton's mother trained the dog to place its front paws on her shoulders during an attack to relieve stress, according to the lawsuit.

Justice Department lawyers accused the university of violating the U.S. Fair Housing Act by not allowing an emotional assistance animal in the dwelling for a tenant with a mental illness.

The university's attorneys argued that the federal law doesn't apply to college housing because the apartments only serve as temporary homes, and only a small fraction of students live in the same room for more than a year. University administrators enforce rules not seen in normal leases, including an alcohol ban and a rule that prohibits students from hosting opposite-gender guests overnight.

University attorneys also argued that allowing dogs could set a precedent for other animals, such as cats, dogs, snakes or monkeys.

U.S. District Judge John Gerrard ruled in 2013 that the university's student housing facilities were subject to the Fair Housing Act. University officials say the decision was the first time a court held that Fair Housing Act applied to colleges and universities.

are a really important part of the decision making. Some of the roads on English Heights get one car per hour on them. It's hard to say, 'We're going to do you first.'"

With the upcoming vote on implementing a 90-cent levy on property taxes for roads and bridge improvements coming up Sept. 29, Kettering said there's still a lot of concern regarding taxes.

"It reinforced the fact that people have concerns about their ability to (control) the cash flow in their lives," he said. "Taxes are the first thing that goes out of their paycheck or Social Security or whatever it is, and they're darn concerned about it — and so am I."

Other topics discussed included a proposed grain sorting facility at Napa Junction and the use of aircraft to study permit and code enforcement.

Bodenstedt, overseeing her first town hall meeting, was happy with the proceedings.

"I thought it was very interesting," she said. "I thought there were some concerned citizens and they brought up some very valid points."

After overseeing one forum Wednesday night in Mayfield, Kettering said he's happy with the direction the town halls have been going.

"I like to see people that have a focus on what they believe and a passion and a spirit," he said. "I like to have them, even if they're opposed to what we'd like to accomplish. I'm glad to visit with them."

The commission will take a two-week break from the forums and hold its next town hall meeting in Gayville at the Gayville Community Center on Sept. 17.

Other town hall dates include:

- Lesterville, 6 p.m. Sept. 21 at the Lesterville Fire Department.
- Utica, 7 p.m. Sept. 21 at Marv's Bar.
- Mission Hill, 6 p.m. Sept. 23 at the Mission Hill Town Hall.

Security

last year by U.S. businesses, government agencies and other organizations that had customer or employee data exposed through hacking or inadvertent leaks, according to the Identity Theft Resource Center.

The home-state hearing also served to highlight Dakota State's nationally recognized cyber operations program. The university has about 700 undergraduate students enrolled this fall for degrees closely related to cybersecurity.

Experts testifying at the hearing said businesses and individuals need to be more aware of basic cybersecurity such as updating software and using strong passwords. They also said there's a significant need to increase the number of cybersecurity professionals.

Dakota State professor Kevin Streff, chairman of the cyber operations and security department, said there's projected to be a global shortage of more than 1 million cybersecurity workers before the end of the decade. He said expanding the cybersecurity workforce — in part through scholarships and financial support — and improving cybersecurity training are necessary.

Eric Pulse, director of risk advisory services at accounting firm Eide Bailly, said that there needs to be a change of perspective toward cybersecurity akin to the shift in attitude toward airplane security after the 9/11 terrorist attacks. People are nonchalant with sensitive data, he said.

Pulse added that companies can put expensive technical protections in place, but is vulnerable to cyberattacks.

"If there's not a secure culture, if an employee is going to click on that phishing link or whatever it is, they could have become the prettiest horse in the glue factory," he said.

Thune said he hopes to help build on changes in law to improve cybersecurity. One measure he hopes to move forward aims to improve information-sharing between business and the government.

The exhibit features photos of Karolevitz in uniform and on duty, with one showing him with Gen. Joseph Stillwell.

"We could fill this whole room with what I have," said Phyllis, referring to her husband's war memorabilia that was not on display.

Hosmer agreed. "The documents on display are a fraction of what (Karolevitz) kept," he said. "I've never seen anything quite like it. It's a wonderful collection."

Those who view the exhibit will get a taste of that collection with the help of a narrative written by Doug Haar that explains the background of each document and photo. It also includes a short biography of Karolevitz and a list of some of his numerous awards.

"Bob is symbolic of the veterans of Yankton," said Hosmer. "A lot of WWII veterans were unable to express their feelings about what they saw and thought, but Bob was more than capable of that, and did a wonderful job preserving his memories."

An ice cream social will be held at the library on Wednesday, Sept. 16, from 6-7:30 p.m., when guests can view the Karolevitz exhibit.

The exhibit will remain at the library for the rest of the month and will then move to First National Bank.

For more information on the Karolevitz exhibit, or if any employer or business would be interested in hosting the exhibit, contact Hosmer at 661-2947.

Man Sentenced To Prison In Sexual Assault Case

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — A 32-year-old man has been sentenced to 18 to 30 years in prison for exchanging money for sex with minors in Lincoln.

The Lincoln Journal reports Adam Brunswick was sentenced Tuesday. According to prosecutors, Brunswick met two girls, who were 14 and 15 at the time, on a social networking website in 2013. Authorities say they agreed to meet at Ballard Park, where he engaged in a sex act with each of them.

According to prosecutors, Brunswick sent text and instant messages to the girls for several months, offering money for sexual acts. Police say one of the girls eventually told her mother what was happening.

Brunswick was given two terms of nine to 15 years in prison that he will serve consecutively.
