

Southeast Job Link Launches Adult Literacy Day Sept. 25

Local non-profit Southeast Job Link is doing something special during Adult Education and Family Literacy week to help more adults learn to read, improve work skills, and finish or continue their education.

"We're launching an Adult Literacy Day of Giving on Sept. 25 to raise awareness about adult literacy and encourage people to get involved by volunteering, supporting and donating," said Sheri Duke, executive director. "We're hoping to raise $20,000 with its $20 for 20 years campaign."

Southeast Job Link started in 1996, nearly 20 years ago. With continued community support, we hope to be around for another 20 years.

Duke points to many individuals in our community that have learned how to read, have improved their skills or have gotten their GED (General Education Diploma) through Southeast Job Link and how many more would be able to learn with more funding.

Take a look at a couple of the success stories over the past year:
A single mom entered the program

a year ago. Right after enrolling she started working a part-time job with the promise of a promotion to a permanent, full-time position when she earned her GED. She passed her last test the first part of April and received her promotion right away.

A young lady in her early 20's, began working on her GED earlier this year. Her husband is a truck driver and only comes home on weekends - she's the care-taker of their five children (three school-aged girls and two toddlers). This young woman fell into an issue with daycare, which created a barrier for attending class. Staff worked with her to set her up for distance learning and schedule special one-on-one sessions every 2 weeks. At one of the first meetings, she expressed that it was difficult for her to study on her own especially with the two little ones, she wasn't getting much done. With assistance from other agencies, a plan to provide temporary daycare assistance was put into place until she could get more permanent options in place. Her two girls loved their new daycare; she was able to meet with staff several times a week and continued to study at home. She was determined to get everything done before the end of the school year because her family was going to move in May. Within only a few weeks she had passed all her tests, preparing her for success in her next stage of life.

"I've been with Southeast Job Link for 14 years now, and I've seen so much growth in everyone here," Duke said. "I've also seen a lot of changes over the years that necessitate more work by all involved, with no additional funding being offered to cover staff and materials. We're a small group, but we work tirelessly to meet participant needs. There are a lot of good people here. Meeting our students' needs and seeing them succeed is very important to us."

You can help provide more people with an opportunity to improve literacy within our communities. Thank you for supporting Adult Literacy - it's important for everyone's future.
